direction, they found the condition of political af-fairs anomalous, unhinged, and out of joint. A state of things prevailed never contemplated and there. that he was coming out second best in the race, and there-tore never provided against by the framers of the Constitution. We had, as a matter of course, to have a starting point, and to begin in a manner someof things prevailed never contemplated, and therewhat irregular, so as to get into a regular line of The officer of the guard and four men came. The officer of the guard informed the Colonel that ject of the condition of affairs in the country, from said he would go. The officer replied if he said he which we take the following, as in point:

But in civil or internal wars, the case is different. It would be an absurdity for any constitution to pro- sued by a Kentuckian, who was nearest him when vide for the contingency of its own destruction.— he took this flight. He soon came up within reach Consequently it makes no provision with reference of him, and dealt him a blow with the butt of kis to its own overthrow. It is equally silent in regard gun over the head that prostrated him. Jeff. rolled to its own overthrow. It is equally silent in regard to the status or relations of any two parties in the State, after a bloody strife in which they may have been engaged for years; one party struggling to be released from its obligations, the other to enforce the nead that prostrated nim. Jeth. Foliated now over on his back, and made some chivalric thrusts with his sabre, which were successfully parried by the Kentuckian, who was in the act of wrenching the sword from his hand when the rest of the party came up and overnowered the Colonal and marched them. Whenever an emergency of this sort arises—not contemplated, not provided for—the only way him back to headquarters, where he was put under in which the statesman can deal with it, is by rea- guard until he repented his rashness and apologized soning from analogy, and applying to it the law of necessity, in such way as will work the least violence to the government and the feelings of the people. Such is our condition at the present time. One thing is certain, the history of all governments and people proves that wherever there arises and applying to it the law of to the General, who released him to pursue his march, a wiser if not a better man.

J. A. Dickson. people proves, that whenever there arises a contingency not provided for, which threatens the existence of the constitution itself, the express letter of Tribune to some of our readers and some of our cothe instrument is, for the time being, disregarded, put in abeyance, as it were, in order to save it from cessity. When George III. lost his reason in 1810,

The Authority of the Existing State excuse. Government.

When shrewd aspirants to political power would lead off the multitude, they always put on the mask of principle, and profess a profound veneration and a scrupulous regard for established law. Such is the course now pursued by the turbulent faction which seeks to destroy public confidence in the legality and authority of the existing State government of Tennessee. The leaders of this faction protest that it is a usurpation, and a violation of the Constitution of 1835, and that the present amended Constitution of the State is invalid, because not amended and ratified according to certain directions laid down in the former Constitution. By this sophistry the people are inflamed and discontented; they are taught that they are the oppressed victims of an utterly unauthorized usurpation; that the present State government is the work of despotism, and has no law nor principle of justice to sustein it. It is manifest to all that if such inflammatory language does not excite the populace to actual rebellion, it must be either because they do not believe the statements of the seditionists, or because they are restrained by fear from repeating the madness of 1861. It is idle for a man to harangue a multitude for hours, denouncing the very organization of the Government as a despotism, a fraud, a usurpation, a swindle, a mock-ery of justice, and then stoutly declare that he does not mean sedition. His appeals and sophistry lead to sedition and nothing else. Rebellion and treason are the legitimate results of his talk. Let us go back to the primary principles of government, and see how far the old Constitution had any authority over the loyal people of Tennessee after 1861. We think that every candid person will see that the old Constitution had no existence except upon paper, and consequently was no more binding upon the people than the laws of ancient Athens and Sparta. From 1861 to February 22, 1865, Tennessee had no living Constitution. It was as dead as any document could be. True, the rules contained in it were used by the Provisional Government, in many instances, as a convenience, but further than that they had no validity, no force. The evidence of the life of a constitution is not of an abstract nature, but is of a constitution is not of an abstract nature, but is The Doctor makes this interesting general stateessentially one of fact. A government exists not in metaphysics, nor in abstract reasoning, but in action, so frequent, so plain, so universal, that the most illiterate are conscious of its existence as readily as they are conscious of the existence of light and darkness, winter and summer. A Constitution which has no government to carry out its provisions and put it in practical operation among the people, is no more valid than a paper which any theorizer may draft in his study-room; such a one as John Locke is said to have drafted for one of the old American Colonies prior to the Revolution. True, if the loyal people of Tennessee chose to adopt, in part, either of the former Constitutions of the State, whether of 1796, or of 1834, they had a perfect right to do so; but they were under no obligations to do so. It was a matter of convenience, not of obliga-

If it be admitted that the Constitution of 1834 was binding upon the people after its suspension in 1861, by rebellion, then several years must have elapsed before it could be amended, and during that time the State must have suffered from the very evil, but in an aggravated degree, which caused the rebellion. Anarchy would have disturbed the whole Commonwealth with ten-fold violence, and the land would have flowed with blood, from the rage and fear of masters, and the insurrection of slaves, determined to break their chains and assert their freedom at all hazards. A reformed government was an immediate necessity. The safety of over eleven hundred thousand people could not wait upon the forms and ceremonies laid down for times of peace. The necessity was not imaginary; it was immediate, absolute, urgent, positive, peremptory. The men who stood up for the National Government were resolved not to have a pro-slavery Constitution re-established over them, to oppress them again with its intolerable evils, and the men who rebelled against the National Government had no voice in the decision of this matter. There were only two methods by which Tennessee could be governed-either as a colony or territory of the United States, or as a the Tennessee — to the rank of Brevet-Colonel of State organized under a new Constitution. The latter method was believed to be preferable, both by President Lincoln and by the leyal citizens of the State, and it was adopted. A convention, summoned by respectable loyal citizens from all parts of the State, met and presented a new Constitution, the exact copy of that of 1835, except as to slavery and a few other points, which was ratified and adopted by the people. The State Government thus established of right, has also become one of fact. It has established courts, inferior and superior; it has levied and collected revenue; it has chartered commercial, manufacturing, mining, religious, benevolent and literary societies; it has arrested transgressors of the law; it has regulated the finances of the State; it holds correspondence with the President of the United States, and is by that officer recognized as a State Government; finally, the officers of the State Bank, the Comptroller, the Treasurer, and the Secretary of State, under the old State Government, have surrendered up their books and papers to Gov. Brownlow, and thus, by their action, have acknowledged him as the head of the State Government.

The man who, against this overwhelming array of the evidence of the legality of the existing Government, raises a quibble or cavil against its authority, is a mere mischief-maker, working in the interest of the old slave oligenchy. The movement est of the old slave oligarchy. The movement against the State Government is a movement to reestablish slavery here. It can have no other purpose, for the sole difference between the Constitution of 1835 and that of 1865 is, that the former recognizes slavery and the latter does not. In all other respects they are identical; the latter is a verbatim copy of the former. The present State Government is a legal, regular, valid, established Government; none could be more so. And if the necole degree none could be more so. And if the people desire Liberal discounts will be made to those who advertise liberally.

The STRAW CUTTERS, General informed him that the transportation was Irregularity of the State Government. all engaged in removing the ordnance from the Many and loud are the complaints made by the rebels and those in sympathy with them, that the Government of the State is irregular, and that the machinery was not put in motion just as the Constitution provides for. When the friends of law and order resolved, in January last, to take steps in that direction, they found the condition of political afbe was his prisoner, and that he had orders to take him to General Wool's headquarters. The Colonel would go, that was enough; but judge of his aston-ishment when he saw the perfidious Jeff. take to his heels again down the street. This time he was pur-

The dictatorship, as known to the Romans, was a temporary suspension of their constitution, in order that in time of public danger no injury should befall the republic. In England the same thing has taken place more than the same t England the same thing has taken place more than once. According to the English constitution, Parliament alone can alter the succession to the crown. Parliament consists of Kings, Lords and Commons. And yet, when James II. fied the realms in 1688, the Lords and Commons received them to be moral nuisances, which it may be impossible to abate, either by contemptuous silence or well-feigned desfiness, or even by open rebuke. Still will they the Lords and Commons resolved themselves into a continue to chatter, to peep, to surmise, to distort, to "Convention." and altered the line of succession. This course was advocated and sustained on the score of absolute nemeddlers have made in his congregation. There is cessity. When George III. lost his reason in 1810, there was no act of Parliament in existence providing for such a crisis. The King being imbecile, of course he could not give the royal assent to an act of the Lords and Commons for the appointment of a Regent. The difficulty was gotten ever by the Lords and Commons passing resolutions to confer the regency on his son, and empowering the Lord Chancellor to affix the great seal to the appointment of a commission for the regular opening of Parliament in existence providing the same insects. ## Truth in Courtship.

Be true to your lover. I don't mean stick to him but don't deceive him. Let him know, let her know what sort of a person you really are. Tell each other your faults, make known your real opinions. state your views of married companions. Despise and abjure the humbugging which is almost univer-sal among lovers. Girls keep out of sight of their failings, and do their best to cause their beaux to think them angels, and men bow like slaves to every wish or whim of their lady-loves, and seem to live but to make them happy. Now that is not as it ought to be; it will not be so after marriage. The woman will grow weary of acting her prettiest, and the man will not endure to all sort of inconveniences, and submit to all sacrifices to please the woman who is securely his own.

It is the dearest pleasure of every true woman to obey and make happy the man she loves, if he is kind and reasonable, but how much better it would be to teach the sweetheart as to her true position. I won't say any more to the girls, for as they have to be wooed and won, and as they have fewer chances than the men have, there is more excuse for them to put the best side out; only let them strive to keep it out, and we have no further controversy with them. But the men are without excuse for holding out such pretenses as they do. Cruel, because the pain which the woman will feel when all his subserviency and preference to her is withheld, will be in proportion to the pleasure with which it is received: unwise, because it may be such a shock to her as to Coal Oil $2,50 per Gallon. cause her reselutely to rebel, or silently cease to love. In either case, the husband will be sorely punished

"It may not be generally known to what extent Harvard college is a charity school. The funds distributed by the faculty among poor students amount to about twelve thousand dollars annually. A nearly or quite equal sum is distributed by private liberality, about half of it through the agency and at the discretion of individual members of the faculty. The recipients of this bounty average not far from one hundred, and many of them have no other pe-cuniary dependence. There is no department of their official duty in which the persons entrusted with this charge are more diligent, careful and faithful, than in seeking out the condition of the poor students, and in adjusting the aid awarded to them in the due ratio of need and merit."

Disinherited for Disloyalty.

James C. Johnson, one of the wealthiest men in the South, died on the 15th instant, at home near Edenton, in North Carolina. He disinherited all his relatives because they left him and identified themselves with the rebel cause. His property, amounting to many millions of dollars, he left to a few personal friends. His immense possessions, on Roanoke river, comprise the richest lands in the country. At the outbreak of the rebellion, he told his slaves, numbering nearly a thousand, that the war would make them free, and they could remain with him or go where they pleased. He was a personal friend of Mr. Clay, whose indebtedness, which amounted to over thirty thousand dollars, Mr. Johnson is said to have canceled without Mr. Clay's knowledge, who was never able to ascertain who his benefacter was. He was about eighty years of age when he died, and was a devout Union man up to the hour of his death.
